Michael Caton and Sam Neill play estranged brothers, bitter rivals in breeding prize-winning sheep, who haven't spoken to each other in years. Things change quickly when one of their prized rams contracts an infectious lethal disease, and the authorities decide to destroy all sheep in the area to stop the disease from spreading. The brothers must set aside their differences to confront this threat to their own livelihoods and their whole rural community. One opts initially for open defiance, while the other tries to outwit the authorities. Eventually, they realise they should work together. Filmed in and around Mount Barker, Western Australia, and starring two highly talented leads, Rams delivers a quintessential Aussie blend of humour and drama set within an industry pivotal to the development of today's Australia.
